PRESENTATION BY PROFESSOR ROY McCONKEY 6

1 THE INQUIRY RESUMED ON TUESDAY, 21ST MARCH 2023, AS 2 FOLLOWS

3
4 CHAIRMAN: Yes, Mr. Doran?

5 MR. DORAN KC: Yes, Chair, this morning's speaker is 10:00
6 Professor Roy McConkey, who is giving a presentation by 7 video link. The presentation is on Module 1, Bamford 8 and Mental Health Law in Northern Ireland, Topics A to 9 C -- A: Overview of Bamford Review and Subsequent 10 Developments; B: Analysis of Different Models for 10:01 11 Learning Disability Services; and C: Focus Study of the 12 Equal Lives Learning Disability Review from 13 September 2005. I've had the opportunity of speaking 14 to Professor McConkey this morning. The link seems to 15 be working reasonably well. There is also a PowerPoint 10:01 16 presentation which the technical team will be operating 17 from the room, and I explained to Professor McConkey 18 the procedure that we followed yesterday whereby the 19 speaker gave the presentation and the Panel put 20 questions as the presentation proceeded, as 10:01
21 appropriate. He was content that we adopt the same 22 approach today.

23
24 I can say, Chair, Professor McConkey is also agreeable 25 to returning on a future occasion, if necessary -- 10:01 26 perhaps when he's actually in the jurisdiction on this 27 occasion -- to deal with any follow-on questions that 28 might arise. You'll recall that I mentioned yesterday 29 that we will invite all Core Participants to provide

1 any follow-up issues or questions that they may have 2 after the presentation today.

3
4 So I don't think I need to say anything further, Chair.
5 You, in fact, gave a full introduction to 6 Professor McConkey yesterday. So I think we're ready 7 to proceed with the presentation now.

10:02

8 CHAIRMAN: Yes, indeed. Good evening, Professor 9 McConkey. Thank you very much for joining us. I know 10 you watched part of proceedings yesterday and I hope I 11 didn't misdescribe your background or your 12 qualifications. But, if I did, you're obviously very 13 welcome to correct anything that I said.

15 Please let me know when you would like a break. I know 16 it's late evening there for you, so I'm particularly 17 grateful for you assisting us. But just let me know.
18 We would normally go for just under an hour, but if you 19 need a break before that, just say. Thank you.

10:03

21 PRESENTATION BY PROFESSOR McCONKEY

10:03

22
23 PROF. McCONKEY: Thank you. Well, thank you very much 24 for the invitation to be with you. I'm sorry I can't 25 be with you in person. When I get an invitation to 26 spend an Irish winter in Australia with my son and 27 family, it's very hard to turn it down! So all being 28 well, I'll be back in Northern Ireland in time for an 29 Irish summer in the hopes that it competes with an

10:03

1 Australian one!

2

3 Can I also apologise for my dress. I noticed people 4 yesterday were well dressed by comparison to the 5 relaxed look that I appear to you. It's simply because 10:04
6 I don't have a jacket and tie with me! I assure you 7 these are not my pyjamas -- I am still dressed and 8 ready to go!

9

10 I might also have to apologise for yawning from time to 10:04
11 time, particularly as the time goes on. And there 12 might be the danger that I might actually be the first 13 witness that falls asleep while addressing the Panel!
14 So please wake me up if that happens -- and your 15 questions would be a good way of doing that! 10:04

16 CHAIRMAN: All right. I'm sure you won't, okay!

17 PROF. MCCONKEY: well, thank you again. Can I have the 18 next slide please?

19 CHAIRMAN: Can you see the slides yourself Professor 20 McConkey?

21 PROF. MCCONKEY: I'd like to pay tribute to three 22 people who were really instrumental when it came to 23 both designing the way the Review was undertaken, 24 managing the organisation of the Review, and the ethos
25 that underpinned it. David Bamford was certainly an 10:05 26 inspired choice of Chair. His background was in social 27 work. He had worked as a field social worker, had 28 worked his way up through various managerial positions
29 and ended up as Professor of Social work at Ulster

1 university. His death was a sad loss to us. He was 2 replaced then by the Vice Chair, Professor Roy 3 McClelland, who you will be meeting, I gather, next 4 week; Siobhan Bogues, sadly, also died some years back.
5 Siobhan headed up the Equal Lives working Group and she 10:05
6 really was an inspiration. She had that very unique 7 ability to be able to relate to people, whether they 8 were service users, carers, professionals, senior 9 administrators and even ministers within the 10 Department. She was a pleasure to work with, an 10:06 11 inspirational leader and her loss is still very much 12 felt to this day.

14 At the conclusion of the Bamford Review, the Northern 15 Ireland Executive made a response to it in which they 10:06 16 said that:

18 "The far-reaching vision for a radical reform and 19 modernisation of mental health and learning disability 20 law, policy and services." 10:06

22 It was, indeed, a far-reaching vision that was 23 portrayed over the years of the Review. The Executive 24 then went on to say that they accepted the thrust of 25 the recommendations by the Review. It was classic 10:06 26 civil service language, arguably. The thrust was never 27 really defined, but certainly we took heart from the 28 fact that they did see that it was a radical reform of 29 what had gone before and, in many people's opinions, as

1 you'll hear as my talk continues, saw that that was 2 really very needed at Northern Ireland at that moment
3 in our history. Next slide, please.

4
5 I gather you have had copies of the presentation that 10:07 6 I'm making to you now. But if I could follow my 7 eminent predecessor yesterday, Mr. Alex Ruck Keene and 8 give you some further reading should you really want to 9 delve deeper into some of the reports that 10 I've mentioned in my synopsis. You can get an overview 10:07 11 at the Bamford Review link that's presented here. And 12 if you're linked to the computer at any time, you can 13 use those links to take you straight to the materials 14 that are listed.

15 10:08
16 The full copy of Equal Lives Report is also available 17 at a separate link, and that was followed by an 18 implementation plan headed up by the Northern Ireland 19 Executive encompassing all the departments of the 20 Government at that time. And that implementation plan 10:08 21 gave you some indication of how Government was taking 22 forward the recommendations that had been in the 23 Bamford Review.

24
25 However, life went on beyond the Review and there were 10:08 26 a number of other significant reports, two of which 27 I have highlighted there for you and which I make 28 mention in my report -- an RQI Review of Community 29 Services in 2016, and then a very exhaustive but very

1 illuminating and detailed account of the whole 2 resettlement process that had happened -- or some,
3 sadly, didn't happen, in the Northern Ireland context,
4 certainly within the time frame that was envisaged.
5 So there's a wealth of written documents backing up 10:09
6 some of the information I'm, in the course of today, 7 only able to skim over. Next slide, please.

8
9 well, we're following a 27-year timeline as I come 10 before you this morning. And it's beginning to make me 10:09 11 feel my age. I wanted to take you through some of the 12 pre-Bamford activities that had happened. When I came 13 back to Northern Ireland in 1997 there were already in 14 hand a number of important developments that laid a 15 good foundation, certainly for the Equal Lives Review 10:09
16 that was going to take place. And those pre-Bamford 17 activities are noted on pages 2 and 3 of the written 18 submission.

20 I'll give you a brief overview of the Bamford Review. 10:09
21 It took place between 2002 to 2007. So it spans a 22 six-year period. And that's briefly summarised on 23 page 3. The Equal Lives Report, which was one of 24 eleven reports that emerged from the Bamford Review, is 25 looked at in a bit more detail, particularly given the 10:10
26 Terms of Reference of the Inquiry, and that takes up 27 pages 4 to 6. And then post-Bamford, in two sections, 28 from 2008 through to 2016, there were a series of 29 action plans produced by the Northern Ireland Executive

1 designed to implement the recommendations from Bamford.
2 Then from 2017 to 2023, up to the present, there have 3 been other reviews of progress that I've alluded to in 4 my written submission. So that's the outline of what 5 I want to cover in this particular presentation. 10:10 6 And can we go to the next slide, please?

8 The most significant document in the 1996 period that 9 I was familiar with was produced by the Eastern Health
10 and Social Services Board. At that time in Northern 10:11
11 Ireland, we had four different commissioning boards, 12 imaginatively titled "North", "Eastern", "Western" and 13 "Southern" and we had eleven community health trusts.
14 Now, this is for a population of about 1.7 million at 15 that time in the 1990s. However, the Eastern Health 10:11 16 and Social Services Board had decided to produce their 17 own commissioning document which they entitled "A Model 18 of Community-Based Services". Now, to our great regret, 19 neither I or other colleagues who were around at that 20 time, we have not been able to source a copy of that 10:12
21 original document. It in some ways probably predated 22 PDF. Those initials probably weren't even known at 23 that time. So we have no actual physical copy of that 24 particular document. But John Richards, who was a 25 recently appointed director of social services who came 10:12 26 over from England, John had no prior history with 27 Northern Ireland and he was the epitome of an English 28 gentlemen, when the emphasis on the word "gentle". But 29 he actually had this manner that masked a very much

1 determination that the services in Northern Ireland
2 were outmoded and were outdated and that we really did 3 need to move towards a new model of community-based 4 provision. That would, of course, mean the 5 resettlement of people from very long-stay 6 institutions. 10:13

7
8 So as part of the model of learning disability that 9 they wanted to promote, they had the concept of having 10 a joint appointment at the University of Ulster and the 10:13 11 Eastern Health and Social Services Board. I saw the ad
12 for it, I was very attracted to the prospect of coming 13 back to Northern Ireland, but particularly coming to 14 work, having spent the last 20 years of my career
15 working in services directly -- first of all, in Dublin 10:13 16 with an organisation called St Michael's House, I was 17 11 happy years there. Then I moved to the Scottish 18 Border and worked there for another religious order 19 called the Brothers of Charity, and there we were 20 developing community-based services for adult persons 10:13 21 with learning disability who previously had lived in 22 long-stay institutions.

23
24 So the joint appointment meant that I had a foot in 25 both camps. In one sense, I had the foot in the 10:14
26 University or academia that provided me with evidence 27 from international as well as GB and Irish studies, but 28 also the other foot was very firmly planted in service 29 delivery, and particularly innovative service models.

1 So there was quite a harmony then between what the 2 skills that I had acquired in the service world and now 3 being extended into a much more academic-led post as 4 well.

5
6 In consultation with John and other colleagues, we then 7 developed up a research programme that would start to 8 gather evidence about what service life was like for 9 people with learning disabilities in Northern Ireland
10 at that time. One of the projects that we happened -- 10:14 11 were happily negotiating, particularly with the Medical 12 Director of Muckamore Abbey Hospital at that time, a 13 rather formidable consultant psychiatrist called 14 Dr. Caroline Marriott, and Dr. Marriott was someone who 15 could be quite forceful in her arguments and didn't 10:15 16 really want to get -- well, she was very keen on 17 research but, equally, very protective of the hospital.
18 But it took, with a bit of negotiation, we did manage 19 that she would become co-director of a project with 20 myself and at that time a doctoral student, who has now 10:15 21 become Professor Laurence Taggart at Ulster University.
22 But we formed a research team in which we were able to 23 monitor all the admissions and discharges to 24 Muckamore Abbey Hospital over a two-year period. Now, 25 this was using the in-patient database that all the 10:16
26 hospitals in Northern Ireland were using at the time.
27 So it was a piece of software that was readily 28 available and, to our surprise, had never really been 29 interrogated in terms of analysing just what does this

1 data tell you cumulatively over the period of time, the 2 two-year period that we had chosen to do this 3 monitoring.

4
5 But four of the findings really stood out from that 10:16 6 particular study. The first one was that there was 7 this revolving door of the same people coming in for 8 admissions, being discharged, and then coming back in 9 for admissions again. Very often, the arrangements in 10 the community where they were discharged to were pretty 10:16 11 fragile. There was not much support for people in the 12 community and, hence, they ended up back in hospital 13 again.

15 The second striking finding was that quite a number of 10:16 16 these people would be what you would call mild or 17 borderline learning disabled. They weren't the people 18 with the more severe disabilities that Alex Ruck Keene 19 had mentioned yesterday in terms of that whole 20 intention of when the mental health order would be 10:17 21 applied and under what circumstances it would be 22 applied. So there certainly were people being admitted 23 to Muckamore who were at that more mild borderline 24 sense.

25 10:17
26 The third big outcome was the treatment that people 27 were given was largely medication-focused. There was 28 very little evidence of any other forms of therapy 29 being applied. And because people often had

1 behavioural difficulties, and these were manifested in 2 the community situations in which they were living, 3 very often they didn't have the support in those 4 situations to help change their behaviour. So although 5 their behaviour may have improved in the hospital 10:18 6 context, which was much more tightly supervised, and 7 with the addition of medication, once they come back to 8 their situation again they ended up showing some of 9 these same behaviours.

11 The fourth thing was that many of the people who did 10:18 12 come into hospital were coming in from nursing homes or 13 residential homes, congregated settings where people 14 were having to live amongst other people that maybe 15 they didn't particularly get on with. And they were 10:18 16 noisy places, given the numbers of people that were 17 there. Some people were in shared bedrooms and they 18 certainly had to share a lot of bath and shower-type 19 facilities.

20
21 So the information that we had gleaned in that period 10:18 22 started to question just what the role of the hospital 23 might be. It wasn't the only project that we did at 24 the time, but we also looked to see just how much the 25 services were -- money that were available to services 10:19 26 in Northern Ireland, and there certainly seemed to be 27 an underfunding compared to what was happening in GB.
28 CHAIRMAN: Can I just ask you to pause for a moment?
29 Sorry to interrupt you.

1 PROF. MCCONKEY: Not at all.

2 CHAIRMAN: I've had a look at your presentation, but 3 can you now remember the two years that were analysed?

4 PROF. MCCONKEY: To be honest, not precisely, but if 5 I took up appointment in '97, I guess we're talking 10:19 6 about 2000 and 2001.

7 CHAIRMAN: Yeah, okay. If that's wrong, could you just 8 drop an e-mail to us and let us know in due course, if 9 you do find out?

10 PROF. MCCONKEY: I haven't the papers with me - I have 10:19 11 them in Northern Ireland - but I can certainly do that.

12 CHAIRMAN: Sure, thank you. It's just so that we can 13 pinpoint more accurately.

14 PROF. MCCONKEY: No problem. And Dr. Taggart's 15 doctoral thesis would also help confirm that, so there 10:20 16 won't be an issue in getting that information to you.

17

18 I should point out that in terms of the overall health 19 and social care budget, around the 1990s, moving into 20 the early 2000s, the proportion of the health and 10:20 21 social care spend on learning disability services was 22 around about 7 or 8 percent of the total budget.

23 Mental health was actually slightly less at that time, 24 but together they constituted about 16 percent of the 25 total health and social care spend in the Northern 10:20 26 Ireland budget -- which sounds an impressive enough 27 figure until you realise that that was the only source 28 of funding that was available to service provision in 29 Northern Ireland, whereas in GB you have local

1 authority funding matched going into -- not necessarily 2 matching, but alongside what was available from central 3 government. So there was the possibility, and although 4 it was difficult to get the actual hard data, it did 5 seem very likely that there was an underfunding of 10:21 6 services and that was reflected, for example, in the 7 proportion of people who were living in what you would 8 call supported accommodation, living away from their 9 families, which we were able to benchmark, both in the 10 Republic of Ireland and to figures from England, 10:21 11 Scotland and Wales. We, in Northern Ireland, at that 12 time, we had 50 percent fewer people living in 13 supported accommodation compared to the other parts of 14 the jurisdictions. But that meant, effectively, that a 15 lot of people were having to live with family carers 10:22 16 for far longer than might have been the case elsewhere 17 in these islands. And those families, other than maybe 18 their relative attending a day centre, really got very 19 little by way of other forms of support.

20
21 And, as I alluded to earlier, there was also within 10:22 22 Northern Ireland at that time -- and it wasn't just 23 peculiar to Northern Ireland because in the Scottish 24 Border we also had taken advantage -- there was a 25 period of time when social security payments were made 10:22 26 available to facilitate people moving into some form of 27 out-of-home care. They were called "board and 28 lodgings" and this was a way in which people could move 29 out of long-stay establishments and the social security

1 payments were sufficient to enable them to live in 2 community settings. But in terms of costs, it was much 3 easier to put those people into nursing homes or 4 residential care homes, homes for the elderly -- 5 modelled on homes for the elderly. And a lot of the 10:23 6 services that had started to develop in Northern 7 Ireland as a community alternative was located in these 8 larger homes. The median was 19 different residents, 9 but that could extend from something like a small home
10 of 10 persons right up to 80 people living in one 10:23 11 registered accommodation. And in many ways, the social 12 security payments were, indeed, successful in one sense 13 in that it enabled people to move out of the long-stay 14 accommodation, but at no real expense to the health and 15 social care budget. So if you were going to provide an 10:24 16 alternative model of care, you would have to find 17 monies separate from this board and lodging
18 arrangement. But in Northern Ireland in the '90s 19 through into the 2000s, this was the main economic 20 vehicle for people leaving long-stay places. 10:24

22 The other thing that was also facilitating the 23 development, these congregated models of residential 24 care, was that the people who had been patients in 25 Muckamore Abbey hospital were deemed to be under the 10:24 26 care of the consultant psychiatrist, who had to sign 27 off their discharge to a place that the psychiatrist 28 considered to be suitable to that person's needs. So 29 we ended up with a very high, compared to other

1 jurisdictions, numbers of people living in nursing
2 homes where there had to be nursing staff, often waking 3 night staff. So, in many instances, we had the 4 development of a model of care that was skewed both 5 for, if you like, financial reasons, but also for the 10:25 6 whole medical model that was really dominating the 7 discharge of people to what was considered to be a 8 suitable place in the community.

9
10 So, much of what I'm describing was starting to be 10:25
11 debated and talked about. In that sense, the Bamford
12 Review was already an opportunity to try and explore 13 and develop many of these issues a step further.
14 However -- if we can move on to the next slide -- the 15 Bamford Review, when it was set up, was not originally 10:26
16 going to include learning disability. It was conceived 17 initially -- and it hadn't the title "Bamford" at this 18 stage, I hasten to add -- it was known as "A Review of 19 Mental Health". Now, at that time, Northern Ireland
20 was under direct rule from Westminster, but one of the 10:26
21 ministers, who is an MP for Kilmarnock, I think, Des 22 Browne -- and I think, if my memory serves me right, he 23 was the father of a young man with learning 24 disabilities, and he championed the addition of 25 learning disability as part of this review of mental 10:26 26 health.

27
28 Now, there was some angst at the time amongst myself 29 and amongst others that this was potentially quite a

1 confusing amalgam of what might be two very different
2 conditions. Subsequently to Bamford, as you'll hear 3 from the people who come to talk to you about service
4 structures, subsequent to Bamford, they have now often 5 created a joint directorship of mental health and 10:27 6 learning disability. But pre-Bamford, these were very 7 distinct programmes of care within the health and 8 social service system. So the people who were managing 9 the mental health side had very little liaison or 10 contact with the people managing the learning 10:27
11 disability side. They were two ring-fenced budgets, 12 pretty well, that fulfilled the service requirements of 13 those two groups.

15 And, of course, the needs of the two groups of people 10:27 16 were also quite different. However, our judgement was 17 that at this -- if this was an opportunity for the 18 whole review of learning disability to also be 19 undertaken, then why would we want to hold out and say 20 nae to it? 10:28

22 So it was fortuitous that both David Bamford, Roy 23 McClelland and Siobhan Bogues were heading up this 24 particular review. And they were very sensitive and 25 very appreciative of the distinctness of what the 10:28
26 thrust of the Review needed to be, both in the context 27 of mental health and the issues facing people with 28 mental health, some of which could be subsumed -- some 29 of that population could, of course, be considered to 1 be people with a learning disability. But the 2 other didn't work -- people with a learning disability 3 equally had very distinct needs.

4

5 So in tackling the way learning disability was to be 10:29 6 managed, the working group model was adopted and 7 Equal Lives became the working group on the learning 8 disability side, and the other nine working groups were 9 allocated different domains within the broader mental 10 health area. And the listing that you see on the slide 10:29 11 are the reports from all these different working 12 groups, with a little bit of augmentation.
13

14 So you can see that the first two reports produced -- 15 the Review started in 2002 and the first two reports 10:29 16 were completed in 2005. A lot of activity went on in 17 that period and, in many ways, it was a very satisfying 18 time to actually feel that there was a real opportunity 19 opening up and that people had a new sense of vision
20 and a new sense of energy that we really could make 10:30
21 things happen. So I look back on it as a really happy 22 and productive time in my career and I was really 23 pleased to be part of it. The people you were working 24 with, whether they be service users, carers, 25 professionals, health service managers, people from a 10:30 26 whole range of disciplines, my whole, if you like, 27 professional life also opened up as a result of that 28 particular experience.
29

1 The other ones that came through subsequently were 2 really focused in on a lot more mental health. And if 3 you've got the stamina and if you really want to look 4 and read some of these reports, you'll probably not see 5 too much mention of learning disability in any of the 10:30 6 other reports. And, partly, that was again the mindset 7 that learning disability had been covered by the 8 Equal Lives Review. So many of the other issues to do 9 with alcohol and substance abuse -- well, I don't think 10 learning disability got much of a mention there. 10:31

11
12 Mental health promotion, no, that was much more geared 13 at a population-based development. Autism spectrum 14 disorders, interestingly enough, had not been 15 considered within the ambit of the Review, but the 10:31 16 autism lobby were quite vocal at that time and a 17 special working group was set up specifically to look 18 at that. But that tended to be people who we might 19 describe -- or who in the past might have been 20 described as being higher functioning people with 10:31
21 Asperger's who did not have a learning disability.
22 We like to think that in the Equal Lives Review, people 23 with a learning disability and autism, their needs were 24 being considered, but the autism lobby were keen to 25 have their own separate recognition. 10:32

26
27 The Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service Report, 28 again because the consultant psychiatry services that 29 were provided through the Learning Disability Programme

1 covered children, adolescents and adults, then ipso
2 facto children with a learning disability were not 3 referred to CAMHS services and, therefore, that report 4 makes sparse mention.

5
6 Likewise, the Forensic Services Report didn't really 7 report much there.

8 9 The Human Rights and Equality of Opportunity Report was 10 a broader based one. Yesterday, Alex Ruck Keene did 11 point out how much the human rights had started to come 12 to the fore.

14 Living with dementia and mental health again was much 15 more focused on the elderly, elderly non-learning 16 disabled population. The legal framework did, of 17 course, cover learning disability and some of the 18 consultant psychiatrists in learning disability were 19 part of that particular review.

21 The final report, strangely, came at the very end when, 22 in some ways, some of us would have thought that would 23 have been the one that we might have been putting a lot 24 of energy in from the outset, but it was probably one 25 of the more disappointing reports and somewhat rushed, 26 I think, towards the end.

28 So those -- that's a very quick overview, Chair, of the 29 whole breadth of the Bamford Review. As I say, I have

1 made the judgement that maybe I could focus more on the 2 Equal Lives Review, in particular, partly because I've 3 little experience in the mental health services, even 4 less contact with the mental health aspect of the 5 Bamford Review, and, if I may suggest that Roy 10:33
6 McClelland, when he is with you, he would be the best 7 person to field the questions. We began to be known in 8 the Bamford -- in the post-Bamford era as the two Roys 9 who often turned up at particular events. And Roy
10 McClelland was very gracious in letting me speak to the 10:34 11 learning disability side of the Review, and 12 I graciously and relievedly let him talk about the 13 mental health side of the Review. So there's no better 14 man to ask him about some of the mental health side.

16 If you're happy, I'd like to move on to the Equal Lives 17 Review. Is that okay?

18 CHAIRMAN: Yes, sure. Please do. Thank you.

19 PROF. MCCONKEY: Next slide. So the Equal Lives Review
20 mention a real reappraisal of the whole lifespan of a 10:34 21 person with a learning disability, starting from birth 22 going right through to old age and death. And the way 23 in which it was chosen to work, modelled in somewhat 24 the way in which the overall review was conceived, and 25 that is that there would be a series of working groups 10:35 26 who would look in detail at the different models of 27 care and support that might be required throughout the 28 life of a person. And the six working groups that 29 Siobhan had convened was, one, looking at children and

1 young people and their families, although I should say 2 that families were -- or family carers, in particular, 3 were a constant theme throughout the whole of 4 Equal Lives, but they are mentioned in that particular 5 regard; the whole issue of accommodation and support, 10:36 6 and that brought in, of course, people living in long 7 stay hospitals and re-settlement.

8 9 Day opportunities covered post-school provision and 10 this was a health and social services review. So there 10:36 11 was little attention given to special schools, per se, 12 and even, although health and social services staff 13 such as therapists would be located within special 14 schools, that didn't really get that much attention.
15 So day opportunities was very much more focused on 10:36 16 adult persons.

18 Aging was another working group. And then a working 19 group on mental health, which could also and did also 20 include people with more complex needs, challenging 10:36
21 behaviours, people who may be in the criminal justice 22 system and so on. And physical health.

24 So each of those working groups had a mixture of people
25 involved in them. There would have been in all the 10:37 26 working groups people with a learning disability; 27 family carers; a range of different professionals;
28 people who were involved in managing services from both 29 the statutory side and the nonstatutory side,

1 particularly voluntary organisations. Siobhan was 2 quite keen that the whole opportunity should be totally 3 open, transparent, and participatory. And that was a 4 really good strategy and it was pretty -- it was really 5 novel in a Northern Irish context. It all seems so 10:37 6 obvious now with our 20/20 vision, but this was the 7 prime example of public patient engagement and 8 co-production. Because alongside the working group, 9 the steering group for the Equal Lives Review, there 10 was an advisory group of people who used services and 10:38 11 they actually called themselves -- the advisory group 12 called themselves the Equal Lives Group, and that's 13 where the name of the report came from. It was chosen 14 by service users who said they want a life that's equal 15 to other people's lives. And there was also an 10:38 16 advisory group of family carers spanning that age range 17 that I mentioned earlier.

18
19 So, in addition to having the two advisory groups and 20 having this mix of people within each working group, 10:38 21 there was organised six public meetings around Northern 22 Ireland so that people could access them relatively 23 close to their own homes. Six were aimed particularly 24 at people who use services. Six of those meetings were 25 primarily for carers, but often that got intermingled. 10:39
26 There was a free-phone help line, information line, 27 that was set up where people could also, if they 28 couldn't get to a meeting, could phone in a comment or 29 write in a comment. And twelve different conferences

1 were organised at different points to really profile 2 new styles of services that were being implemented not 3 just in the Northern Irish context, but also with 4 invited speakers coming in from, for example, Sweden,
5 Kent Eriksson; from Scotland, Lisa Curtis, who was 10:39 6 working in the Scottish development projects at that 7 time; and a number of people from other parts of GB, 8 and also a civil servant who had been involved from 9 Ireland, who'd been involved in the review of services
10 in the Irish context. So it was quite an eclectic and 10:40 11 a very novel thing for people in Northern Ireland at 12 that time to have the opportunity to really think 13 through in a collegiate way how services could look at 14 some point in the future. And, as I say, the whole
15 thrust of the Equal Lives Report was to represent as 10:40 16 much as we could the voices and aspirations and needs 17 of the people for whom the service was going to be 18 provided.

19
20 Out of all of that gathering of information, and I have 10:40 21 to give Siobhan real credit for this because, in 22 addition to all her skills as communicator in a verbal 23 and social way, she was the primary author of the Equal 24 Lives Report and brought to it the structure and the 25 clarity of language that you can read in it. 10:41 26

27 Five key values were identified; twelve objectives for 28 remodelling services and sports; and seventy-four 29 recommendations for actions that were needed to model

1 and extend learning disability services across the 2 lifespan. Seventy-four was probably too many, but when 3 you had that whole lifespan -- because I often say, you 4 know, when you have a topic like learning disability, 5 all human life is there in terms of the span of age, 10:41
6 the variety of people, the heterogeneity of their life
7 experiences. So it's very hard to just narrow it down 8 to "just let's concentrate on a few recommendations".
9 But those recommendations were really, as much as we 10 could make them, to be quite concise, precise, ones 10:42 11 that we could see that were realistic in the time scale 12 available, although we did admit that it might take up 13 to 15 years for all of these recommendations. This was 14 a long-term, radical reform that we were hoping would 15 be instituted in Northern Ireland -- 10:42
16 CHAIRMAN: Could I just ask this: You had five working 17 groups --
18 PROF. MCCONKEY: Six.
19 CHAIRMAN: Is it six working groups -- yes.
20 PROF. MCCONKEY: Yes. 10:42
21 CHAIRMAN: Of those, which would have had input into 22 your recommendations in terms of the ability to make 23 them real or, to use a horrible word, operationalise 24 them? So did you have anybody who was able to advise 25 you on the reality of putting into effect your 10:43 26 recommendations, because sometimes that's pretty 27 crucial.
28 PROF. MCCONKEY: I agree, yeah, absolutely.
29 We certainly did because we had health service managers

1 who were already delivering services and they knew what 2 some of the constraints were going to be. You had 3 professional people like therapists, psychologists, 4 psychiatrists, who also from a professional point of 5 view were able to see. But they were all challenged by 10:43
6 service users saying, "We don't want more of the same, 7 we want something that's different." And it was 8 through that dialogue approach that -- you know, 9 we talk about the Good Friday Agreement quite a lot in 10 Northern Ireland and when you've been through some of 10:44 11 the negotiations that were involved in trying to find 12 the wording of these recommendations, you get a sense 13 of what it means to negotiate. So, yeah, there were 14 times when the boat was pushed out in terms of the 15 recommendations, and I'll allude to some of those as 10:44
16 we move on to the next section, and there were others 17 that were so obvious that you think, well, why isn't 18 this happening, because this is something that could 19 actually start tomorrow. And, ironically, in some 20 parts of Northern Ireland it was already happening 10:44
21 because there was a great deal of variation and people 22 not really learning from each other.

23 CHAIRMAN: Yes. Sorry for interrupting. Thank you.

24 PROF. MCCONKEY: Not at all. So, can we go to the next 25 slide? Oh, sorry, just to say what, obviously, this 10:44 26 resulted in, because we had all these different working 27 groups looking at different aspects of the people's 28 life, it has to be said that there's no one model of 29 learning disability services. It's an amalgam of a lot

1 of different models that are very much more aimed at 2 particular needs and aspirations that people hold and 3 that are more suited to certain parts of their life
4 than other parts. So there isn't, if you like, a model 5 per se, but you could say that there is an overarching 10:45 6 ethos or some sort of end vision that you have. And 7 David Bamford, in his preface to the Equal Lives
8 Report, wrote this as the overarching aspiration 9 underpinning Equal Lives -- he said.

10 11 "Progress needs to be accelerated on establishing a new 12 service model which draws a line under outdated notions 13 of grouping people with a learning disability together 14 and their segregation in services where they are 15 required to lead separate lives from their neighbours." 10:46

17 Every word in that was very carefully crafted. He went 18 on then to say -- next slide -- he went on then to say 19 -- oh, sorry, I've --

20 CHAIRMAN: Yes, I think we've...

21 PROF. McCONKEY: You've got --

22 CHAIRMAN: Yes, it's one more.

23 PROF. McCONKEY: Okay, go one more. So he went on then 24 to say, as you probably can read it:

26 "The model of future needs to be based on integration, 27 where people participate fully in the lives of their 28 communities and are supported to individually access 29 the full range of opportunities that are open to 1 everyone else. "

2
3 So, there, he contrasts that segregated, congregated 4 model of people living and not having the same 5 opportunities as others, with this model, which -- and 10:47 6 if Alex Ruck Keene were here he would probably point to 7 the UN Convention of Rights of People with Disability 8 -- and Equal Lives anticipated the publication in, if 9 you like, and I'm not sure that we take any credit for 10 that, but certainly it shows how much the tenor of 10:47 11 people's aspirations had developed not just 12 internationally, as the UN convention embodied it, but, 13 here locally, we had an affirmation, if you like, from 14 an international perspective of what we needed to be 15 doing to move away from an outmoded model into this 10:47 16 rather different model. And people said, "Yeah, that's 17 exactly what we need." So there was almost this sense 18 of, well, we've really achieved something now, of 19 building this coalition of people with like-mindedness 20 -- from service users, through carers, through health 10:48 21 service managers -- this sense of, gosh, we've done it, 22 we could really make something happen. It was, though, 23 with some caution in the sense that, although this was 24 not overly emphasised because there was no time scale 25 per se to any of the recommendations, because, as you 10:48
26 rightly say, Chair, the whole process of implementation 27 requires another set of skills and opportunities to 28 know and to plan and to make sure you have the 29 resources, both human and financial, to let you do

1 that. So we guessed that, in 2005, by, maybe, 2020, we 2 would have done it in terms of not just a perfect 3 vision but, equally, in the year in question.

4
5 Are you okay still for time or would you like to take a 10:49 6 break?

7 CHAIRMAN: I was just thinking, because you're just 8 about to move on to your recommendations, aren't you?

9 PROF. McCONKEY: Yes, equalised recommendations, yeah.

10 CHAIRMAN: And I think you're just a bit more than 10:49 11 halfway through?

12 PROF. McCONKEY: A bit more than halfway, I would say, 13 yes.

14 CHAIRMAN: would you mind then if we took a short break
15 now? 10:49

16 PROF. McCONKEY: No, I'd welcome that.

17 CHAIRMAN: All right, let's take a short break now.

18 We'll say fifteen minutes, because people need to get 19 out and grab a cup of coffee or tea. You can do the 20 same. Thank you very much, indeed. The normal rules 10:49 21 don't apply. You can talk to who you like, but you may 22 not have many people to talk to at your time of the 23 evening!

24 PROF. McCONKEY: They're all in bed! Fast asleep.

25 CHAIRMAN: we'll see you in fifteen minutes. Thank you 10:49 26 very much indeed.

27 PROF. McCONKEY: Pleasure.

28
29

1 THE INQUIRY ADJOURNED BRIEFLY AND RESUMED AS FOLLOWS:

2
3 CHAIRMAN: welcome back. Thank you. So we're moving 4 on to recommendations?

5 PROF. McCONKEY: we're on slide 10. Chair, I have 11:07 6 chosen to highlight recommendations that are, maybe,
7 particularly pertinent to the Inquiry. I can obviously 8 talk to other recommendations as well, but I'll leave 9 you to ask those questions, if I may. But I did want 10 to highlight this set of recommendations in as much as 11:07 11 they relate to people in long-stay hospitals or in 12 hospital-based assessment and treatment.

14 This issue had been bubbling up in Northern Ireland, as 15 I alluded to earlier in the pre-Bamford years, but also 11:08 16 there was accumulating international evidence that what 17 we were about to propose could be well-evidenced from 18 experience in other countries -- and, indeed, we had 19 examples of them being implemented in Great Britain.
20 We also had examples, albeit on a smaller scale, within 11:08
21 Northern Ireland. We, as part of the research
22 programme with the Eastern Health and Social Services 23 Board and one of the other consultant psychiatrists at 24 Muckamore, we had done a follow-up of people who had 25 been resettled from Muckamore Abbey into accommodation 11:08 26 in the community, and that was a story of great 27 success. There was very few people that needed to be 28 readmitted to the hospital because of a placement 29 proving unsuitable.

1 But the people that we spoke to -- we interviewed all 2 the new residents in their new settings -- we spoke to 3 quite a proportion of the family carers, a number of 4 who said they were quite opposed to the idea of their 5 relative moving out of the hospital initially but now 11:09 6 that they'd seen them in these new surroundings, they 7 were really pleased and felt that it really had made a 8 big difference to their lives as carers, as well as to 9 their relatives' lives. So we had this growing 10 evidence based. 11:09

12 Then, sad to say, we also had a growing awareness that 13 there was a higher risk of abuse happening in these 14 types of long-stay hospitals, and that goes back quite 15 a number of years in England and in Wales, and, indeed, 11:09 16 I remember a colleague of mine in the past working in 17 Wales had said to me, "Do you know, maybe the only way 18 we'll ever close long-stay hospitals is when there's 19 abuse proven to have occurred and on a systemic basis."
20 I thought at that time that was a bit of an 11:10 21 exaggeration, but, sad to say, I think his words were 22 quite percipient in that way.

24 Although the heightened risk of abuse, I think, to be 25 honest, wasn't really recognised that much in the whole 11:10
26 context of the Equal Lives Review, in fact I went back 27 into the Equal Lives Review to do a search on how often 28 the word "abuse" appeared in the whole document, and 29 there were only six instances of the word "abuse"

1 appearing and two of those was in the context of 2 schoolchildren and being bullied and the others were 3 more general -- to do with risk assessment around the 4 potential for abuse. So it didn't get a heightened 5 profile at that time, but obviously subsequent 11:11 6 revelations have shown that to be true.

7
8 So when we came to write the Equal Lives
9 recommendations in regards of people, their living 10 arrangements outside of a family care setting, we were 11:11 11 brave enough to put in that by June 2011 -- and 12 remember this was being written in 2005, so we were 13 talking about a five/six-year programme of resettling
14 people from the hospital. Now, at that time there 15 would have been over 400 people in the hospital, so 11:11 16 we're talking about having to resettle people in the 17 order of 70 to 80 a year to meet that particular 18 target. But we did think that was doable because 19 we had the evidence from other resettlement programmes
20 in the UK that people had visited under the auspices of 11:11 21 Eastern Health and Social Services Board, and there was 22 also the precedent that that number of people had been 23 resettled, albeit over a slightly longer period from 24 Muckamore in the preceding years. So that seemed to us
25 to be a way of achieving this ambition. 11:12 26

27 The other reason that I alluded to earlier about this 28 number of people coming in to the hospital on short 29 admissions and then being discharged and then coming

1 back again, it's pretty clear that you needed some form
2 of emergency support and accommodation for individuals 3 where their actual placement has become unsafe either
4 for themselves or for another person. So the hospital
5 was fulfilling a function that could well be filled if 11:12 6 there were local arrangements to enable the person to 7 be removed from the situation which they were finding 8 quite difficult at that moment in time, whether it be a 9 family home or a group home or a nursing home; that the 10 person could live temporarily for a week/two weeks or 11:13 11 whatever, get back on an even track again, if you like, 12 and then return to their home, whatever that home would 13 be.

15 Now, we didn't have that form of provision within 11:13 16 Northern Ireland. So the hospital, by default, became 17 that place where people went to when they needed that 18 break if they lived within the eastern and northern 19 areas of Northern Ireland. So that was a 20 recommendation. 11:13

22 The other recommendation that in some ways was a bit of 23 pushing the boat out that I alluded to earlier was that 24 all new housing that needed support workers, either 25 people sleeping in, waking night staff or visiting 11:13 26 staff during daytime hours, should be for no more than 27 five individuals within the same household. This 28 recommendation, we were encouraged to include, having 29 talked to Swedish colleagues for whom this had become

1 very much a legal requirement within certainly one of 2 the cities of Sweden -- and Kent Eriksson, who had 3 married a Northern Irish girl and was a frequent 4 visitor to Northern Ireland, was quite to the fore in 5 that movement and helped influence and support us in 11:14 6 making this particular recommendation.

7
8 why five, you may ask. Well, the idea was that people 9 could then live in ordinary housing. You didn't need 10 to build new accommodation with grandiose numbers of 11:14 11 bedrooms, bathrooms and so on and so on. Also, it was 12 more likely that a group of three people, who 13 themselves wanted to live with one another, could then 14 be accommodated, and maybe their circle of friends
15 could grow up to five. But having up to fifteen/twenty 11:14 16 people that you don't know -- and why would you want to 17 live with them -- there was no choice given to you.
18 This was a much more viable model --

19 CHAIRMAN: Sorry to interrupt you again, but just to 20 ask I understand that worked in Sweden, but did 11:15 21 you have buy-in from your patient groups to whom you 22 were speaking in relation to that number?

23 PROF. McCONKEY: Very much. Very much. That was their 24 aspiration, to have their own house. And they wanted
25 to be with their friends, though. Now, some people 11:15 26 aspired to having their own accommodation and that was 27 accommodated. This was particularly in relation to 28 housing where support was going to be provided. But if 29 people could get by with just minimal amounts of 1 support, then we would certainly support them to be in 2 arrangements where they had their own flat or their 3 apartment that they could live in. But this was the 4 idea of people would still be living in smaller groups

5 and, for economic reasons, there's other arguments from 11:16 6 that point of view. But the model was actually 7 working. One of the trusts in the Eastern Health and 8 Social Services Board had embraced this model and it 9 had worked very successfully for them. So, again, we 10 could see examples of how it could become a reality and 11:16 11 was becoming a reality, with a good evidence base that 12 this really produced better outcomes for individuals in 13 terms of their quality of life.

15 The other point we went on to stress, and this is the 11:16 16 boat being pushed out even further, was that, by 2013, 17 all accommodation for people under 60 years should be 18 for no more than five people. Now, effectively, this 19 was flagging up a new form of resettlement of people 20 moving out of these nursing homes and residential care 11:16 21 homes that I've mentioned earlier were the dominant 22 form of provision, in which people who were not in 23 those settings said they didn't want to go to those 24 settings, nor did their carers want them to go to those 25 sorts of places. Ironically, the people living in 11:17
26 those places, because they actually knew nothing 27 different, I guess, to some extent, were okay.
28 They didn't see that as being particularly something 29 that they were clamouring to move from those places.

1 However, some people who did do it were really pleased 2 that they had done that. But I guess here we were 3 putting down a marker that if we were going to be true 4 to this notion of people living fuller lives in 5 ordinary settings, then we had to start to think ahead 11:17
6 to a period when maybe this congregated form of housing 7 -- the under 60s was particularly chosen because we did 8 recognise that that model of care, nursing homes and 9 residential homes, could well suit some people who were 10 older and who were less able and wanted to enjoy simply 11:18 11 the company of other people. And, for them, that was 12 much more in a normative sense what was happening for 13 older people in Northern Ireland anyway. And 14 particularly in rural areas where it would be very 15 difficult for people to necessarily access that type of 11:18 16 accommodation, they may well be accommodated within an 17 existing nursing home or care home if the regulatory 18 authority was willing to recognise that as a suitable 19 placement. So the notion was really to really try and 20 appreciate that the model of residential care needs to 11:19 21 be tailored to the needs and wishes of the people who 22 are going to be in it. So it was by no means a diktat 23 that only group homes was the only model -- there would 24 be a range of different alternatives within that.
25 CHAIRMAN: Did you explore as part of this whether that 11:19 26 would require considerable funding of new housing?
27 PROF. McCONKEY: At this time, Chair, there was the 28 development of the housing associations, whose remit 29 was to develop what you might call social housing, not

1 just for people with learning disabilities but people 2 with other social needs. And there was, therefore, 3 money coming through -- in Northern Ireland terms, the 4 Housing Executive, which was a non-governmental body
5 that was the source of capital monies for people in 11:20 6 rented accommodation -- and there was other means 7 whereby the housing could be found for people.

8
9 In the bigger scheme of things, of course, learning
10 disability housing was not going to need a whole lot of 11:20 11 houses. So if you take, for example, the people moving 12 out of Muckamore Abbey as part of that long-stay 13 population, 400 odd people, you might need 80 homes or 14 100 units to accommodate. But in the social housing 15 programme, each year you might be talking about having 11:20 16 1,000 units as part of that programme. So we didn't 17 ever think that was an unattainable objective. In 18 fact, there were organisations actively doing that, 19 joining with housing associations to source housing.

20 11:21
21 One of the other things that the housing associations 22 were able to do was to buy existing properties so that 23 they owned the house they bought but then they put 24 tenants into those houses that had been bought. So 25 you didn't even have a capital programme to think 11:21 26 about, a capital bill programme with all the lead-in 27 times that would be required from that.

28
29 So we were seeing examples already in place across

1 Northern Ireland of housing associations and voluntary
2 providers doing this. And, indeed, some of the trusts 3 also used a similar approach.

4 CHAIRMAN: Can I just interrupt you for a second?
5 I think Dr. Maxwell wants to ask a question. 11:21

6 DR. MAXWELL: Yes, can I ask did you also look at 7 staffing costs, because some of these places did need 8 support staff. There's an economy of staffing costs in 9 having larger facilities; did you actually look at 10 whether the ongoing revenue costs of staffing would be 11:22 11 an issue?

12 PROF. McCONKEY: No, we didn't. And I think that's one 13 of the implementation issues, Dr. Maxwell, that -- and, 14 in fact, in retrospect -- I was reflecting today -- if 15 you were to ask me what were some of the shortcomings 11:22 16 of the Equal Lives Review, certainly I think there was 17 insufficient attention paid to value for money. In 18 that respect, the costs of the long-stay hospital, any 19 evidence that we could gather on those costs -- and,
20 indeed, it was very hard to extract from the trusts how 11:22 21 much money was being spent in the long-stay 22 accommodation -- the information, although on the face 23 of it, if you like, the staff/resident ratio might be 24 1:6, just as an example, and in a group home you might 25 be talking about a ratio of 1:2, but, of course, what 11:23 26 was happening in the hospital context was you were 27 paying nursing staff and higher managerial costs 28 because you had all the layers of management that 29 invariably come with the larger institutions, whereas

1 in the group homes, you were very often employing what 2 you might call care assistants. Now, these were 3 talented people in terms of their personal qualities 4 and often when the NVQ system was up and running, they 5 were getting a lot of extra training and well able to 6 provide good-quality care in those settings. And they 7 are still, to a large degree, an exploited workforce 8 with, if you like, minimum pay often being offered to 9 them because the Commissioners have often been trying 10 to drive down the costs.

11
12 But if you look at value for money in terms of, well, 13 what quality of life are you buying for the money
14 you're spending on staff, that changes the agenda 15 considerably. But I'd be the first to admit that we 16 could do with a lot more of that value for money 17 appraisal and, if it does cost more to have people in 18 group homes of the smaller scale that we're talking 19 about here, or more individualised arrangements, the 20 quality of their lives might be so much better than 21 what would happen in a long-stay hospital. But that 22 certainly is an issue that -- implementation would be 23 one that that's where the next phase would take that, 24 I hope.

11:24

25 DR. MAXWELL: I mean, we see this in all community 26 services and it's actually the double running costs of 27 the transition that are the problem, because you don't 28 move the money on the same day out of the hospitals to 29 the community. And, actually, unless you budget for 11:24

1 double running of both the hospital and a community 2 service, you can't make it happen.

3 PROF. McCONKEY: That's right. And the bridging costs
4 are well documented for all the resettlement schemes,
5 for example, in Great Britain. And, of course, in the 11:25
6 Great Britain context, those monies were then recouped 7 from the sale of the land and the buildings that 8 formerly created the long-stay hospital. So Gogarburn
9 Hospital in Edinburgh, which I would have known well
10 through the resettlement programme when I was working 11:25
11 in the Scottish Borders, that was sold off to the Royal 12 Bank of Scotland and the Lothian Trust had a windfall 13 in terms of the amount of money they got for that site, 14 which more than compensated for the spending that they 15 put in. 11:26

17 Now, Muckamore Abbey is going to be a difficult 18 scenario to sell that land because, for all intents and 19 purposes, it was supposed to revert to be an 20 agricultural land if it ever closed as a hospital. So 11:26 21 that option wasn't available. But, again, it would 22 have been a case of the Government saying, "well, how 23 could we redeploy that site in a way that would save us 24 the capital costs that would be involved if we were 25 doing another new build for another service user?". 11:26

26 CHAIRMAN: That was something that I wanted to ask you.
27 was using the Muckamore Estate itself ever looked at in 28 cost terms? Because it's a very large estate when you 29 look at its footprint.

1 PROF. McCONKEY: Absolutely, yeah. And a lot of the 2 money that was going into the hospital wasn't on direct 3 patient care either, but we could never get to the 4 bottom of how, as it turned out to be, the North -- at 5 this point in time, we're talking about a health and 11:27
6 social service trust called North and West
7 Belfast Trust, and there was a South and East 8 Belfast Trust, both of whom became amalgamated into the 9 Belfast Health and Social Care Trust -- a slight change
10 of name. But, if you like, at that moment in time, 11:27
11 Northwest Trust was the only trust in Northern Ireland, 12 I think I'm right in saying, that didn't have a 13 hospital. All the other trusts had a general hospital 14 or whatever, and Muckamore Abbey Hospital came under 15 this North and West Belfast Trust. And the benefit of 11:27 16 having a hospital trust was that you probably had more 17 income coming to supplement your HR functions, your 18 finance functions and other functions of the Trust.
19 Now, I don't have evidence for that. This is -- I must 20 admit this is from my experiences of dealing with 11:28 21 people within the Commissioning Board through my joint 22 appointment, but those financial arrangements were 23 always very opaque. It was very hard to actually suss 24 out how much money was being spent on direct patient 25 care and how much was being spent to run the plant, if 11:28
26 you like, and keep North and West Belfast Trust 27 subvented in its other functions. But that's something 28 that you might ask some of the people who are going to 29 appear before you.

1 CHAIRMAN: Thank you. We've interrupted you.

2 PROF. MCCONKEY: Not at all.

3

4 The second dimension to the Equal Lives recommendations
5 that related then again to hospital provision was 11:29

6 looking at where -- if people do need to have a time of 7 assessment and treatment, whether it be on the 8 short-term basis or a long-term basis, is there an 9 alternative to doing that within a hospital setting?

10 And certainly we felt and the evidence was accumulating 11:29

11 from experiences in GB, in particular -- I should say 12 at this point the Republic of Ireland, where I had 13 worked and had ongoing contact with, they did not have 14 any hospital-based assessment and treatment services.

15 They were often managed within the existing service 11:29

16 provision that people were using, although there was 17 some move to trying to create specialised assessment 18 and treatment units of the sort that you might have 19 seen developing also in Great Britain through the 20 private hospital-type arrangement. But the model we 11:30

21 were looking to tended to be happening around England
22 and in Scotland and this had been promoted through a 23 lot of evidence that was being gathered, not least by 24 the Tizard Centre, which Prof. Murphy and her

25 colleague, Jim Mansell, would have been quite to the 11:30

26 fore in. So the recommendations that we made here was 27 that many more people with a learning disability should 28 be actually accessing mainstream mental health 29 services, either on a community basis or an in-patient

1 basis. We were particularly attracted to the model
2 where, if you like, the people with a learning
3 disability might have some beds within a unit attached 4 to a general hospital. I had seen this model evolve in 5 the Scottish Borders and that meant that your services 11:31 6 then could be much more localised, in the west of the 7 province, for example, you could have it so that people 8 would not need to go to Gransha Hospital in Derry, 9 which would be some 70/80 miles away, but if there were 10 beds available in the South and West Hospital -- or at 11:31 11 that time it was located in Omagh -- that would have 12 also meant that people had the option of having -- it 13 still would have been in the context of hospital, but 14 it would also have been in the context of a wider 15 mental health service provision occurring in those 11:31 16 places.

18 But the other thrust of the argument was the need for 19 multi-disciplinary, community-based assessment and 20 treatment services. And some of the trusts, the 11:31 21 Northern Trust, in particular -- and I gather you're 22 going to have Dr. Petra Corr talk to you at some 23 point -- she was involved very much with the setting up 24 of that type of model within the Northern Trust and 25 diverted a lot of patients who previously might have 11:32 26 gone to Muckamore Abbey Hospital, were now being 27 successfully being seen by these community-based 28 assessment and treatment services.

1 This was a different model to what was happening at the 2 moment by -- the consultant psychiatrists and their 3 senior house officers, their registrars and so on would 4 do outpatient clinics in the community trusts, but it
5 was very much modelled on the type of review, the 11:32
6 hospital-based type review. There wasn't a great deal 7 of multi-disciplinary working going on. It was much 8 more the consultant psychiatrists or one of the doctors 9 reviewing the individual that was still under the care
10 of the consultant. They may well have had some 11:33 11 involvement with psychology or possibly with therapies, 12 but there wasn't, if you like, one particularly 13 coherent assessment and treatment plan that we could 14 see evidence for. That model of outpatient reviews
15 seemed to still be very dominant. So the idea was to 11:33 16 try and build up the expertise within the community so 17 that people did not need to be admitted to hospital; 18 they would have the opportunity of getting support 19 where they lived. And if we link that with that 20 emergency support accommodation in the community that 11:33
21 I referred to, it would mean that the community trust 22 providing the services would still keep responsibility 23 for the person while they were in this emergency 24 support accommodation, but certainly also when they 25 were actually working with individuals in their own 11:34 26 homes or in their place of residence.

27
28 There was another type of peculiar double funding going 29 on here because what happened if a person was removed

1 from the community into the hospital, then the hospital 2 costs were then incurred, but their costs in the 3 community were still needing to be covered until such 4 time as they came out of the hospital. Now, there were 5 some arrangement that after a period of time there 11:34 6 might be some adjustments made, but very often there 7 was no great incentive for the community people to 8 actually divert any resources if the person is taken 9 out and goes to the hospital because then the hospital 10 is going to be bearing the costs of their assessment 11:34 11 and treatment.

12 CHAIRMAN: And otherwise, presumably, they'd lose their 13 place. Sorry to interrupt you --

14 PROF. MCCONKEY: ...to prevent that type of dichotomy 15 and no continuity, really, between people's needs in 11:35
16 that respect.

17 CHAIRMAN: Professor, sorry, we lost you for a moment.
18 I think the collection is less good than it was. It's 19 showing as unstable.

20 PROF. MCCONKEY: Oh, sorry. 11:35

21 CHAIRMAN: No, it's not your fault. We'll carry on.

22 PROF. MCCONKEY: well, in fact, those were the two -- 23 that latter two, the model of service to replace 24 hospital-based assessment and treatment. I should say 25 at this point -- you asked me earlier about how much 11:35
26 unanimity there was regards of that. One of the things 27 that we were struck by when we were taking evidence was 28 that, in the midst of all of the information-gathering 29 that we were doing as part of the Equal Lives Review,

1 we had a presentation from the Eastern Health and 2 Social Services Board, but that was largely the North 3 and West Belfast Trust who had responsibility for 4 Muckamore Abbey, and from the Western Health and Social 5 Services Board who were responsible for another 11:36 6 hospital in Derry called Gransha Hospital, and these 7 presentations were telling us about the new capital 8 improvements that they were going to be making at both 9 Muckamore Abbey Hospital and at Gransha Hospital -- a 10 new capital development to create a new assessment and 11:36
11 treatment service centre for up to 110 people, I think 12 it was, at Muckamore Abbey, and a similar -- not as big 13 a development at Gransha -- I can't actually recall the 14 number of beds there.

15
16 Now, this struck us as really very odd that this 11:36
17 development was being planned at the same time when a 18 review was moving towards the point of saying 19 "We actually don't need new capital development, we 20 want to get people off these sites." But, 11:37 21 unfortunately, that message never got heard and I can 22 speculate on various reasons why it didn't. But you 23 will know if you've visited Muckamore Abbey Hospital 24 that capital development went ahead and that associated 25 revenue costs with that, not just in terms of the 11:37
26 medical staff -- because, remember, we had staff 27 doctors, as well as the senior house officers, 28 registrars and consultants. We had also additional 29 psychologists going and working from there. So a lot

1 of the money that could have been made available for 2 community-based assessment and treatment services, or 3 for new capital developments, at a moment in history it 4 was spent in perpetrating a model that this review a 5 few years later was going to say something very 11:38
6 different. Can we move to the next slide?

7 PROF. MURPHY: Roy, can I ask you, before you go on, 8 can you tell us whether at the time when you were doing 9 this -- so around 2005 -- were there community-based 10 multi-disciplinary teams of any kind around Northern 11:38 11 Ireland for people with learning disabilities?

12 PROF. MCCONKEY: Not in the same sense as you would 13 have had it clearly delineated in England, I think,
14 Glynis, or at least places within England. The whole
15 movement -- and I suppose part of this was this medical 11:38 16 model dominated development or evolving services that 17 was very much led by consultant psychiatrists, who 18 then, over time, had in the hospital, at least, 19 recruited psychologists -- a few psychologists used to 20 work there -- some speech therapists, some physios, but 11:39 21 no occupational therapists. And I can tell you an 22 anecdote about that, but anyway! That model hadn't 23 really got replicated in the community. Although those 24 individuals were there in their single professional 25 capacities -- so you did have psychology doing 11:39
26 assessments, you did have therapists doing assessments, 27 but they weren't necessarily working as a team, not 28 even co-located within a team. There was embryonic 29 development starting to happen, but I would say much of

1 that happened post-Bamford, rather than during the time 2 we were reviewing in 2005. And I think what I've just 3 told you there about the redevelopments in Muckamore
4 and at Gransha rather was evidence that there wasn't 5 much interest from those constituents -- people 11:40 6 managing the hospital and working in the hospital -- to 7 actually explore the notion of multi-disciplinary 8 working. And so the outpatient model of reviews was 9 still the dominant thing, in my perception.

10
11 But I think there was another group of psychologists -- 12 and Petra Corr's name I've mentioned -- there were 13 others coming off the training courses who had been 14 more widely read, who were much more involved with the 15 British Psychological Society, started to attend the 11:40 16 learning disability section of that, and I think they 17 started to draw in much more of an interest in and 18 engagement with the whole concept of multi-disciplinary 19 worked. It required very careful negotiations, as you 20 might guess, trying to marry that to a very strongly, 11:41 21 medically-led model. But they succeeded in places and 22 I think it's taken root very much more in the 23 Northern Trust area, rather than in, arguably, in the 24 West, North Western part -- less so in the 25 Belfast Trust. 11:41

26 PROF. MURPHY: Thank you.

27 PROF. MCCONKEY: If we go to the next slide, we'll move 28 on to post-Bamford, maybe? So the Equal Lives Report 29 was completed in 2005. Now what, I think, in our

1 innocence we hadn't really appreciated --

2 CHAIRMAN: Stop, hold on one second. I think we might

3 have missed a slide. I don't know if you want to go

4 back?

5 PROF. McCONKEY: Did you? 11:42

6 CHAIRMAN: Yeah, the 2008 to 2016 Action Plans.

7 PROF. McCONKEY: That's the one I want to come on to 8 now.

9 CHAIRMAN: Exactly, yeah. We were on the next slide.

10 PROF. McCONKEY: Oh, were you? Sorry. Okay, thank you 11:42

11 for that. So the Equal Lives Report was submitted in 12 2005 and what we had underestimated was that really

13 nothing was going to happen by way of taking forward

14 any of the recommendations until all the Bamford

15 Reviews were in. Now, we didn't -- I suppose at some 11:42

16 level we thought that seemed to be a waste of time and,

17 in a sense, it comes back to the notion of learning

18 disability being tagged on to a wider review of mental 19 health and, in our innocence, we thought that we were

20 masters of our own destiny and we could have taken the 11:43

21 whole thing and run with it. But that wasn't to be.

22 In fact, until the last report was submitted -- and by

23 this time Northern Ireland had its own executive -- so

24 for much of the period of time over the Bamford Review,

25 it was direct rule ministers who were actually the 11:43

26 policymakers within the Department, if you like, and 27 any meetings that we had with ministers, it was with 28 the direct rule ministers.

29

1 I attended a few of those meetings. I think the thing
2 I found most interesting was that the direct rule 3 minister was keen to tell us about the problems they 4 were having in their constituency with learning
5 disability services and didn't really, I think, have a 11:43 6 grasp of what it was we were trying to tell them about 7 the problems we were having. So it was with some -- 8 well, you know, you hope that local politicians would 9 have a better understanding, shall we say, of the 10 context in which we were operating. 11:44

12 So we had to wait until 2007/2008 until the Executive 13 were up, and I've already quoted to you that the 14 Executive had appreciated the radicalness of what was 15 being proposed. And one of the -- the First Minister 11:44
16 of Health in the new Executive was an Ulster Unionist 17 politician by the name of Michael McGimpsey, and he had 18 appointed what he called a Board of Experts, a small 19 number of his -- and I accepted his invitation to be 20 part of that Board of Experts who were meeting around 11:44 21 2007 for a two-year period, 2007/2008, and this was to 22 prepare for the implementation of Bamford. But it was 23 made very clear to us that our role was advisory; that 24 this was going to be the responsibility of the 25 Department of Health as the lead agency, but it would 11:45 26 be a cross-governmental department action plan and that 27 was something we felt was really helpful and necessary 28 because housing came under one, transport came under a 29 different department, education, further education and

1 so on. So it made a lot of sense. Although I do 2 remember the Permanent Secretary or the Head of the 3 Civil Service in Northern Ireland, who I happened to 4 know personally because he had trained at Queen's with 5 me when I was doing psychology there, saying, you know, 11:45 6 it's the kiss of death if you set up an inter-7 departmental committee, and I hadn't appreciated what 8 he meant by that until, as you'll hear, this is how it 9 unfolded.

10
11 So the Government then did produce an action plan, 12 which was to cover the years 2009 to 2012. That action
13 plan was a fairly substantial document. I've given you 14 a link to it. There was 43 pages devoted to learning 15 disability and all the different actions that the 11:46 16 various departments were going to take in relation to 17 implementing. It was hard sometimes to track where the 18 Bamford recommendations sat with relation to this 19 action plan that had been produced by the 20 cross-departmental steering group and the teams that 11:46 21 were involved in it. Nonetheless, it certainly seemed 22 a good action plan and in terms of an intent to make a 23 start on the whole implementation of the Bamford 24 recommendations.

26 However, in 2012, when they did a review of it and the 27 action plan was being renewed then for another 28 three years, this action plan only had two pages
29 devoted to learning disability and, among the actions

1 they were proposing in the new action plan would be a 2 25 percent reduction -- only a 25 percent reduction in 3 the number of long-stay patients in learning disability 4 by 2013 -- you recall that we thought the whole place
5 could be cleared by 2011 -- and anybody would be 11:47 6 promptly and suitably treated in the community and no 7 one would remain unnecessarily in the hospital.

8
9 That, again, sounded to be very much in line -- broadly
10 in line with what -- was hoping. But when 2016 came 11:47 11 and there was a consultation over the action plan, it 12 was pretty apparent that these targets were not being 13 met at all. And that consultation was done very 14 widely. There was a lot of information gathered 15 through focus groups, through individual responses, and 11:48 16 so on. So we waited with bated breath to see the next 17 action plan, which, of course, would have covered the 18 years 2016 through to 2019, and nothing happened. The 19 consultation and the reports of the consultation were 20 never published and haven't yet been published. So 11:48 21 we assumed that the inter-departmental initiative just 22 withered away.

23
24 However, the Department then had got this idea of 25 service frameworks and the Chief Medical Officer was 11:48 26 particularly keen that we should move towards a set of 27 service frameworks that would guarantee to individuals 28 that if you're a user of health and social care 29 services, that there was three big standards: they

1 would keep you safe; there would be a minimal risk of 2 harm to service users and staff; they would be 3 effective because they'd be informed by an evidence 4 basis and commissioned and delivered in an efficient 5 manner; and that they'd be person-centred.

7 Now, the service frameworks had originally been 8 designed more for cardiac, respiratory, and cancer.
9 But the concept that the Department came up with was 10 that these could be extended to mental health, to 11 learning disabilities, to children services and care of 12 the elderly. So these were going to be transposed 13 onto social -- what was essentially social care social 14 services, even though their origins were very much 15 within the medical framework. But, again, as Siobhan 16 Bogues bravely took on chairing the Service Framework 17 for Learning Disability, which was good continuity with 18 Bamford, I got an invitation to be part of that 19 framework as well, and the idea was there would be 20 these service standards against which all services for 21 people with learning disabilities could be judged with 22 key performance indicators. I've highlighted three 23 standards from the Learning Disability Standards that I 24 think are particularly relevant, I think, to your 25 interests.

11:49

11:49

11:50

11:50

26
27 The first, of course, was that: "People of all ages 28 are safeguarded from harm through abuse, exploitation
29 or neglect." Standard 26: "All people with a learning

1 disability who has behavioural challenges should be 2 able to get support locally." And Standard 28:
3 "Health carers should work in partnership with a 4 variety of agencies in order to ensure that the 5 accommodation needs of people with a learning 6 disability are addressed."

11:50

7
8 And some of the key performance indicators, for 9 example, for Standard 28 was that the number of -- 10 proportion of people living in accommodation with less 11 than five other unrelated people, coming directly from 12 the Bamford Review, would have been one of the key 13 performance indicators.

11:51

14
15 So, again, a lot of effort was expended in developing 16 these service frameworks. They were largely, if you 17 like, a desktop exercise in general. They weren't 18 necessarily tested. The idea was that the working 19 party would develop these service frameworks and then 20 they would be handed down for services to implement.
21 But that stage didn't really ever seem to happen and, 22 indeed, when it came to a review of progress -- if you 23 move to the next slide now...

11:51

24 CHAIRMAN: Can I just ask, sorry, the working groups 25 that you've just described, how often were they 26 meeting?

11:51

27 PROF. MCCONKEY: This is for the service frameworks, 28 Chair?

29 CHAIRMAN: Yes.

1 PROF. MCCONKEY: I would have thought monthly. It was 2 fairly intense work again and it was a mixture of 3 people. Like, because Siobhan had taken on the chair, 4 she modelled it very much on the way the working groups
5 in Bamford had done. So there was service users, 11:52 6 carers, as well as different professionals. And they 7 reported -- there was a project board chaired by the 8 Chief Medical Officer and each of the working groups on 9 the different frameworks would report into that project
10 board. 11:52

11 CHAIRMAN: I was going to ask were the working groups
12 reporting effectively to the Department of Health 13 through the CMO?

14 PROF. MCCONKEY: Yes.

15 CHAIRMAN: So there's nobody from the Department of 11:52
16 Health actually on the working groups?

17 PROF. MCCONKEY: Yes, there would have been. So, yes, 18 and, as it happened, one of the officials was a parent 19 of a young man with Down's syndrome. Again, I've known 20 him from Queen's University and, his son, I would have 11:53
21 known through the services that he used. So, yes, 22 there was that personal involvement and engagement in 23 that respect.

24 CHAIRMAN: So you had that advantage. And how easy did
25 you find it to understand what the DoH were actually 11:53 26 doing about the recommendations that were coming out of 27 your working groups? How did you keep track of what 28 was actually happening on the ground?

29 PROF. MCCONKEY: The information went up rather than

1 any coming down, I think, would be my honest answer to 2 that, Chair. So that Siobhan, through our working 3 group, for example, she would report to the project 4 board of what was progress and how the things were 5 going. But we didn't ever get a strong indication as 11:53
6 to what then was going to happen. Rather vaguely, it 7 was hoped that the then Health and Social Care Board, 8 and there now just was one for Northern Ireland, that 9 the Health and Social Care Board replacing the four 10 health and social service boards that previously had 11:54
11 existed, would somehow monitor how these service
12 frameworks were operational within the social service
13 model and/or the public health agency because Minister 14 McGimpsey had this notion that we also needed to have a 15 public health agency, as well as having a commissioning 11:54
16 board. So we had this -- it was very hard to suss out 17 then whose responsibility was it going to be.
18 Certainly, the Department saw themselves as producing 19 the policy, if you like, and then it would be up to 20 other people to implement that policy when it was 11:54 21 handed down.
22 CHAIRMAN: Yes. And, of course, by this time, sadly, 23 David Bamford had died some time ago. You were 24 effectively chairing the Bamford Review. And did you 25 have a key point of contact in the DoH to whom you felt 11:55 26 you could speak freely so that you could find out what 27 was going on?
28 PROF. MCCONKEY: At the time when the Board of Experts 29 was set up, it was the Permanent Secretary who had

1 taken a particular interest in that and, subsequently, 2 the Director For Learning Disability would have been 3 the main point of contact, would have been the lead.
4 And I think you're going to meet the current lead for 5 learning disability within the Department. But you 11:55 6 have to remember that the Department of Health has its 7 primary concern and interest in acute hospital 8 provision. It's no coincidence that they changed the 9 name back to Department of Health when it used to be 10 the Department of Health, Social Services and Public 11:56
11 Safety. And I think in some ways it always was a 12 Department of Hospitals. And the Department of Social 13 Services, in particular, and because learning 14 disability was very firmly within this social services 15 side of the house, as it were, was not seen as a 11:56 16 particularly high profile and there was quite a 17 turnover of personnel working within that section.
18 CHAIRMAN: Yes. No, I understand that quite well.
19 Thank you.
20 PROF. MCCONKEY: There were some others reviews of 11:56 21 progress happening in that period, 2016 to 2022. And,
22 in 2016, the RQIA often undertook what they call topic 23 reviews, and they chose to do a review of adult 24 community service, adults with learning disability and 25 community services. And I accepted an invitation to be 11:57 26 the independent reviewer alongside two RQIA staff, in 27 which we met with the what were now five community 28 trusts. We previously had eleven, but with 29 amalgamations they were now whittled down to five.

1 we met with each of them to review the range of 2 services that they had done. And the conclusion that 3 they came to, which I have mentioned in the report, was 4 that the resettlement was still ongoing. It was not 5 going to even meet the target that had now been set 11:57
6 originally of 2017. The admission of people with a 7 mild learning disability to mainstream mental health
8 services remained very low. And the behaviour support 9 teams that were starting to be set up by the 10 trusts didn't really have an evidence base for the 11:58 11 models they were doing and very little, bar one trust, 12 the Northern Trust, had any evidence of impact and what 13 outcomes they had achieved for the people that they had 14 dealt with.

15
16 There were other aspects of the review which were very 11:58 17 positive. I've only highlighted those that link in 18 close to the recommendation, as I've said. We could 19 see changes that were happening in terms of some of the 20 accommodation needs. There was a growing development 11:58 21 of people living independently, people living in 22 smaller group home accommodation, better family support 23 services, new types of employment services, further 24 education opportunities were opening up. So other 25 models were starting to take route, and that was, 11:58 26 really, despite any implementation plan coming from the 27 Department, but more individuals within the 28 non-statutory sector, in particular, because they had 29 access to other sources of funding, were able to

1 instigate on a model basis new forms of services. And 2 some of the trusts themselves were also beginning to 3 create some of these new services that people needed.
4 But the progress that we had envisaged happening within 5 the context of long-stay and hospital-based assessment 11:59 6 and treatment was still quite sporadic.

7 8 The Minister commissioned an independent review of 9 resettlement in November 2001. I've referenced this 10 document as well because it's an extremely well-written 11:59 11 document and gives you a very detailed historical 12 record of all the attempts that had been made at trying 13 to get resettlement completed, particularly from 14 Muckamore Abbey Hospital, and I would commend that to 15 you. But again, their recommendation was that a lot of 12:00
16 the failure was due to a lack of performance 17 management. There was much more of an emphasis on 18 monitoring, rather than actually managing the process.

19
20 Another development, of course, is yourselves -- oh, 12:00 21 sorry, the other development in 2021 was that the 22 Health and Social Care Board instigated the development 23 of what they called a regional learning disability 24 model. There was some concern that the five trusts had 25 developed very diverse models of provision into things 12:00 26 like day opportunities, in types of accommodation and 27 so on. And it was a bit of a bemusement to us that, 28 having had the Equal Lives Review, that there was the 29 need to do what almost seemed to be a repeat of the 1 Equal Lives Review. And the report that they have 2 submitted to the Department has not been made public, 3 as yet, but it was widely consulted by the Board and 4 the people leading that review and they came up to all 5 intents and purposes that there would be the need for a 12:01 6 much more coherent model of service provision so that 7 the people, wherever you lived in Northern Ireland, you 8 would have the opportunity of having the same type of 9 supports that you would get if you were living in 10 another part. That seemed to be the big intent behind 12:01 11 this particular model --

12 CHAIRMAN: I'm so sorry to interrupt. You said it 13 wasn't made public, but did you get a copy of it?

14 PROF. MCCONKEY: No, I haven't had a copy. I was to 15 have -- they were to consult with me at one point to 12:02 16 hear my views, but that never happened in the end.
17 I can't now recall the reason for it. So they were 18 consulting fairly widely. But, no, I think they felt 19 it had to be approved by the Department before it could 20 be made public. This is another instance of the 12:02
21 information going up. But it still hasn't been made 22 public, so we're no nearer getting a regional learning 23 disability model. And now that the Board is gone and 24 it's replaced by an SG group, I'm not quite sure what 25 its status is going to be. 12:02
26

27 And then yourselves in 2022. And then the Minister 28 also, shortly after announcing the Inquiry, has had a 29 consultation going on the closure of Muckamore Abbey

1 Hospital in 2022.

2
3 So that's where we are at the moment, nearly bang up to 4 date. And I suppose if you were to ask me for some 5 conclusions, I think I would pinpoint these particular 12:03 6 ones. There are plenty more, but I think I certainly 7 do need to be concise here. I would say the great 8 success of Equal Lives was the fact that it really was 9 visionary in terms of creating a person-centred and 10 human rights-centred model of service provision. And, 12:03 11 as you heard yesterday from Alex, it's really rooted 12 within international best practice and, therefore, for 13 us in Northern Ireland, who really do want to 14 acknowledge the rights of everyone that lives in this 15 small part of the island, that everyone has a right to 12:04 16 equal opportunities.

17
18 I think for me -- and, again, in retrospect, it's hard 19 to really appreciate just how much of a model it 20 provided of public patient involvement and 12:04 21 co-production at a time when those words weren't even 22 buzz words at all. We didn't realise we were doing 23 what now seemed to be best practice. So I think, in 24 that sense, those process elements.

25 12:04
26 And I think if new community-based services have been 27 established, it may not have spoken to what we might 28 say transformations within the system, per se, but it 29 certainly spoke to the people and gave them aspirations

1 if you were a carer or if you were a service user that,
2 yes, this is something that we could be doing and need 3 to be doing for people. And I mention the 4 non-statutory sector because I've worked in the 5 voluntary sector over the years...

12:05

6 CHAIRMAN: Sorry, we lost you for a second. You said
7 you had worked in the voluntary sector and then we lost 8 you --

9 PROF. MCCONKEY: I'd worked in the voluntary sector, 10 both in Dublin and then latterly in Scotland and I've 11 been a trustee for voluntary organisations in Northern 12 Ireland, and I can see how quickly that sector can 13 respond flexibly, locally, and in a person-centred way, 14 and also draw down funding from organisations like the 15 Big Lottery or from the European Social Fund when 16 we had that available.

12:05

12:05

17
18 So, very often, the developments that were promoted 19 within Equal Lives were being implemented by people on 20 the ground at the grassroots. So while we may not have 21 influenced as much as we would have liked to have done
22 the systems, per se, I think it made a big contribution 23 in changing people's mindsets as to what was attainable 24 for people with a learning disability.

12:06

26 I think I also have to realise I've learned a lot about 27 how the lack of commitment to implementation there was 28 within statutory systems. The status quo seemed to be 29 something that they valued -- it needed to be protected

12:06

1 more than what implementation of new things could offer
2 -- and make life easier for everyone, in the end. So 3 your question earlier, Chair, when you said about 4 implementation, I think I now appreciate how, maybe,
5 any review needs to be really conscious of right at the 12:07 6 outset thinking: well, how are we going to change the 7 system? How are we going to make that happen? And 8 I've already said that I think the value for money has 9 been rarely considered and we didn't do sufficient 10 attention to that element. And the economics and the 12:07 11 financial arguments that now are so topical within the 12 Northern Irish health and social care system, that 13 value for money. And, yet, we've had the Bengoa
14 Report, we've had the Transforming Your Care Report, 15 and those equally have met similar fates to the Bamford 12:07 16 Review.

18 So I think there's a lot of lessons that we can draw 19 for future reviews and inquiries in Northern Ireland
20 about all the effort that we expend and all the talent 12:07 21 we bring together and all the great minds that we,
22 hopefully, try to address pressing issues, can easily, 23 apparently, not come to very much. So I hope you are 24 spared that outcome from your particular inquiry.

25 CHAIRMAN: Can I thank you, first, for bringing the 12:08
26 Bamford Report to life in a way that you simply can't 27 get if you just read it, which, of course, we have, 28 certainly the Equal Lives part of it. Also, I think 29 your comments on the difficulties of implementation

1 are, I have no doubt, pertinent to this and every other 2 inquiry because, as you well know, governments are 3 always very good at commissioning reports and 4 inquiries; sometimes they are rather less good at 5 implementing the recommendations. So certainly we will 12:09
6 take your advice very much on board. Thank you.

7
8 I don't know if there are any questions from my Panel 9 members or from counsel?

10 MR. DORAN KC: Not at this stage, Chair. As 12:09 11 I indicated, there may well be a follow-up to the 12 sessions that we've had today and yesterday.

13 CHAIRMAN: Yes. Certainly. Yes, indeed. And if we're 14 lucky, we will have Professor McConkey actually with 15 us in -- or at least in the jurisdiction on the next 12:09 16 occasion.

17 PROF. MCCONKEY: I very much hope so.

18 CHAIRMAN: Professor McConkey, can I thank you very 19 much, indeed. It is pretty late for you, and we are 20 just about to stop and have lunch here in Belfast. But 12:09
21 thank you very much for a really enlightening delivery
22 and presentation of your report. So, thank you.

23 PROF. MCCONKEY: Thank you very much for your 24 attention. Much appreciated. And thank you for your 25 kind words. 12:10

26 CHAIRMAN: Thank you very much, indeed. We'll close 27 the link.

28 PROF. MCCONKEY: Good-bye.

29 CHAIRMAN: All right. I think the next witness is next

1 wednesday?
2 MR. DORAN KC: That's correct, Chair. It's 3 Professor Roy McClelland, who has been mentioned in 4 dispatches over the last couple of days. I should say, 5 Chair, he is in a different position from the two 12:10 6 speakers from whom we have heard on Module 1. They 7 have given essentially expert presentations on the 8 developments that have brought us to where we are 9 today. Professor McClelland will be giving evidence on 10 behalf of the Trust -- 12:10 11 CHAIRMAN: So he's more of a witness, as it were, 12 rather than a presenter.
13 MR. DORAN KC: Yes, indeed. And he has, indeed, 14 provided a detailed witness statement with exhibits, 15 and those materials have been circulated to all Core 12:11 16 Participants.
17 CHAIRMAN: Yes. And there's a fairly significant 18 amount of it, I think.
19 MR. DORAN KC: Yes, indeed.
20 CHAIRMAN: All right, thank you very much, indeed. 12:11 21 We will stop now and reconvene on wednesday next at ten 22 o'clock in the morning.
23
24 THE INQUIRY WAS THEN ADJOURNED TO WEDNESDAY, 29TH MARCH 25 2023 AT 10:00A. M. 11:58
